[TREND] Trend scout for 75 Deep backlog (auto-run, 2026-07-18)

Two trends worth chasing this week

1. Aretha Franklin — "Respect" (1967) is back on Reels/TikTok via a lip-sync format where creators mouth "what you want, baby, I got it" over product/service reveals. It's a straight soul classic riding the broader disco/funk/soul revival that's currently pulling Earth, Wind & Fire's

"September" and the Bee Gees' "Stayin' Alive" back into rotation — the whole lineage 75 Deep already draws from is having a cultural moment right now, not just this one track.

- How to use it: don't touch the Aretha vocal itself (too recognizable, too legally hot) — instead borrow the format: a confident vocal hook
- answering a "what do you want" prompt, chopped and gated into a
- call-and-response stab under a 122–124 BPM groove. Works as a teaser edit
- for whichever 75 Deep track has a horn or vocal stab with that same
- "here's your answer" swagger.

2. The "summoning hand-sign → hard cut on the beat drop" reveal format

(TikTok's #1 trend for June, still running hot into July, 36M+ posts, borrowed from Jujutsu Kaisen, now used for everything from food reveals to outfit reveals). It's a pure edit template, not a sample — but the mechanic

(tension gesture → hard cut exactly on a drop) maps directly onto a 75 Deep release strategy: build 8 bars of filtered tension, gesture/blackout, hard cut into the full drum groove. A 12–15 sec clip of just that cut is native to the format and doesn't need new music, just a smart edit point on a track that's already close to done.

Remix target: Cheryl Lynn — "Got to Be Real" (Columbia, 1978)

- On-brand why: disco-funk with a bassline that's practically Chicago
- house scripture already — it's been chopped, flipped, and interpolated
- across deep/soulful house for decades (the "sounds like Unkle Funk would
- have played it" test from the taste profile passes easily). Sexy,
- confident vocal hook ("got to be real") gives it the same call-and-response

- quality as the Aretha trend above, so it doubles as a hook for that format
- too.
- Mash/edit approach: isolate the "got to be real" vocal + the
- Fender Rhodes stabs, rebuild the low end as a warm 120–123 BPM deep house
- groove (C minor or A minor pocket to sit near the "1998" fingerprint),
- keep the original bass guitar riff panned wide under the new sub rather
- than replacing it outright — it's the most recognizable part of the record
- and the whole reason the flip reads as a flip, not a bootleg.
- Trending potential: rides the disco/funk/soul revival that's already
- pulling classic-era records back into TikTok/Reels rotation this month,
- and the "got to be real" hook is short, iconic, and lip-sync-ready —
- exactly the shape of clip that travels on these platforms.
